About the Programme:

Energy security has an important bearing on achieving national economic development goals and improving the quality of life of the people. The level of per capita energy consumption has for long been considered as one of the key indicator of economic growth. Different renewable energy technologies (RET) and their advantages will be discussed. Energy generated by using wind, tides, solar, geothermal heat, and biomass including farm and animal waste as well as human excreta is known as non-conventional energy. All these sources are renewable or inexhaustible and do not cause environmental pollution. More over they do not require heavy expenditure. Energy security has an important bearing on achieving national economic development goals and improving the quality of life of the people. The level of per capita energy consumption has for long been considered as one of the key indicator of economic growth. In this STTP an attempt has been made to present potential of non-conventional renewable energy sources in India. Different renewable energy technologies (RET) and their advantages will also be discussed.
