Objective of Seminar

Water is one of the main resources which have to be utilized properly for the economical development of a nation. It exists in various forms both above and below the earth surface as surface water and ground water. The estimation of these resources is one of the major challenges faced by the hydrologists. Several advanced techniques are being developed for quantifying the water resources. Research is going on in this field. Software and Experimental investigations is being developed for the purpose. Modeling and simulation techniques are being used to predict the hydrological data to design micro and macro water storage and water conveyance systems. The people involved in this field have to be updated with the recent developments. The Course contents have been taught by eminent experts from IIT, NIT & other reputed Organizations. The proposed workshop is planned to achieve the above objectives.

Topics to be covered:

- Surface water hydrology
- Ground water hydrology
- Water resources management
- Hydrological modeling and simulation
- Software uses in Water Resources
