Introduction:

The demand for Management Education all over the country has fallen drastically. When the demand was high, a very large number of MBA Colleges were started. Now many of the Colleges, particularly those which are located in mofussil areas, are becoming non-viable.

The reasons for the fall of demand may be the uneven quality of education. Another may be a less than complete understanding that the needs of an MBA program are quite different from the needs of a standard 2-year educational program, based on book-learning and examinations.

The Workshop will try to jointly determine both the causes and the remedies.
