ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

This one day seminar is intended for those professionals who are interested in developing new areas in the field of AFFORDABLE HOUSING. The policies and approaches of the govt. public, private, and non-profit sectors exert strong influences over the growth of cities, suburbs, and towns, including the development of housing. To date, traditional development patterns characterized by the separation of uses, limited transportation options, and suburban and ex-urban expansion have failed to adequately secure affordable housing for low-income households. Smart growth, through its regional approach to development and its goal of increasing choices in housing and transportation, can improve the quality, distribution, and supply of affordable housing.

PARTICIPANTS

Professors from Engineering colleges, Professionals, Business executives, Builders, Real-estate developers, Entrepreneurs eyeing new technologies, Students from ME and BE are all eligible to take part in this seminar.

It is intended to have participants from both industry and academia.
