Description:

The Internet of Things (IoT) envisions a future in which digital and physical entities can be linked, by means of appropriate information and communication technologies, to enable a whole new genera of applications and services. There are several areas in which research is needed for making deployment of the concept of IoT reliable, robust and efficient. Many technical communities are vigorously pursuing research domains that contribute to the IoT. In this webinar, we present a survey of technologies, applications and research challenges.
